

Introduction

Recently I signed up for a course on how to sell digital products online. One of the first things the course taught was how to find the best thing to sell.

It recommended that we create a course in our area of expertise and sell that online. My area of expertise is creating a phenomenally delightful marriage. I don't like bragging. But, if there is one thing I brag about it would be my marriage.

(Spoiler alert: It does not come by luck. It comes from

Lots of hard work,
Lots of willingness to say you're wrong,
Lots of saying you're sorry whenever you
mess up,
Lots of quick forgiving
Lots of unselfishness and
The willingness to follow the wisdom you find in the next eleven lessons.)

Loneliness within a marriage

We once had a very sad experience within our extended family. A niece was married with two children and decided to get a divorce. Her husband had no choice. She was going to leave him.

A few years later she told me the story. She used the word lonely. Her husband did not relate with her very well and she was lonely within her marriage.

That theme repeats itself within this course. In your marriage you do not want to run the risk of either one of you becoming lonely.

We're never lonely

53 years ago I married the most delightful lady I had ever met. Not willing to miss out, I fairly quickly married her. She's still the most delightful lady I have ever met.

I still remember several days after we were married when I said, "Let's never get into a rut." And we didn't. We often do little spontaneous things together. We have the utmost respect for each other. We really have lots of fun together.

We endeavour to be good examples for our children and grandchildren. The result is lots of love among all of us.

It is my sincere desire that you learn from every page in this course and have as wonderful a marriage as we have.

Happy learning.
